

Mental health support: suicide prevention

We all worry and struggle with feelings at different times. Many people wonder if they have mental health problems and some are afraid to get help. Here's what you should know.

They may feel sad or elated, anxious, depressed, overwhelmed, fearful, disoriented or forgetful. Relationships may become difficult. Work seems harder than it used to be. Something feels wrong. Life may be a struggle. If feelings or symptoms are affecting your life, consider getting help. Mental illnesses can be successfully treated.

Gaining perspective on suicide

Understand it's not a character flaw to have thoughts of self-harm or a desire to escape mental anguish. For you to feel better, you must acknowledge that you need help and get in touch with someone.

Know that there are some circumstances or conditions that may increase your risk for suicide. They include drug and alcohol use, depression, a family history of suicide or the recent suicide or death of a friend.

Make sure to pay attention to your feelings and get in touch for help. There are people around you who care and would welcome the opportunity to help. Suicidal thoughts are usually a serious symptom of a treatable illness. The key to dealing with suicidal thinking is treatment of the underlying illness.

Ways to seek help

- A psychiatrist or other mental health care professional is an excellent choice. Suicidal thoughts need to be taken seriously and evaluated carefully. If you are in treatment and are feeling suicidal, you should call your physician or therapist right away.
- Suicide hotlines are another source of help for you. Available 24/7, they offer a quick means of reaching someone who cares, in the time it takes to make a phone call. One of the hotlines' biggest advantages is that they permit you to remain anonymous. No one needs to know who you are or any other identifying information.
- Find help online if it's more comfortable for you, but choose the site carefully. Some suicide bulletin boards have little traffic and may not respond very quickly to your needs, although some sites may be excellent in supporting you over time.
- Clergy, family members and friends can be good support systems, particularly those you trust enough to confide in. Friends and family members in particular have an emotional investment in their relationship with you and much to lose if you are successful in taking your own life. Allow them to be there for you when you need it.

Steps you can take

- Safely store medications by asking a friend or family member to hold onto them, so they cannot be used in a suicide attempt.
- Keep phone numbers for hotlines and mental health professionals easily accessible.
- Pay attention to your moods and feelings and be on the lookout for a return to persistent thoughts of self-harm. Practise self-observation and recognise when you need support and where you can find it.
- Remove firearms or other means of lethal injury from your home, so the means to end your life are not readily at hand.

There are a variety of resources available to yourself and loved ones at optumwellbeing.com

Our Critical Support Centre offers emotional support resources and information when you need it most. Find a variety of topic areas including mental health, traumatic events, natural disasters, grief and loss, supporting adolescents in crisis, and more.

Critical support when you need it

Visit optumwellbeing.com for additional critical support resources and information.

To access specific benefits information visit livewell.optum.com and log in with your access code:

Call for support

This programme should not be used for emergency or urgent care needs. In an emergency, call the local emergency services phone number or go to the nearest ambulatory or emergency room facility. This programme is not a substitute for a doctor's or professional's care. This programme and its components may not be available in all locations, and coverage exclusions and limitations may apply.

Optum® is a registered trademark of Optum, Inc. in the U.S. and other jurisdictions. All other brand or product names are trademarks or registered marks of the property of their respective owners. Because we are continuously improving our products and services, Optum reserves the right to change specifications without prior notice. Optum is an equal opportunity employer.

© 2024 Optum. All rights reserved. WF12062251 309912-102023 OHC