

Change, Crisis, & Loss

Loss of a loved one, natural disasters, layoffs, and quarantine all involve a change from the old reality to a new reality. Grieving is a natural and normal part of this shift. Understanding the grief process can help you cope.

Stages of Grief

Dr. Elizabeth Kubler-Ross is a well respected grief expert who has identified five non-linear stages of grief. Stages can change from minute to minute. This is normal. Grief takes time to work through.

Denial & Shock

You may find yourself thinking “This can’t be happening.” “They will walk through that door again.” or “Surely they made a mistake when they laid me off.” You may feel numb.

Anger

Anger/ blame towards oneself, the person who passed away, and/or others is common.

Bargaining

Many have thoughts of negotiating with a higher power or someone they see as in control of the situation. E.g.: “Please God, I won’t ever ___ again if you give me ___ back.”

Sadness and Depression

Crying, intense sadness, and withdrawal are very normal responses to grief. This phase is an integral and important step in the grief process.

Acceptance

In this stage one learns to live with the new reality and there are usually more good days than bad ones. This may sound like: “I’ll be able to find a way forward from here” or “I am fortunate to have shared so many memories with my loved one.”

A sixth stage of grief has been identified by David Kessler, an expert in the field of grief who has collaborated closely with Dr. Kubler-Ross: Finding Meaning.

Finding Meaning

Looking for ways to grow personally and honor/ remember loved ones as you move forward.

The stages are not linear; people go through different stages at different times and in different orders.

How You May Think

- Poor concentration
- Shorter attention span
- Slowed problem solving
- Memory problems
- Difficulty making decisions

How You May Feel Emotionally

- Depression
- Grief
- Guilt
- Anxiety or fear
- Feeling lost or overwhelmed

How You May Feel Physically

- Headaches
- Chest or stomach pain
- Muscle tremors
- Difficulty breathing
- Elevated blood pressure

How You May Behave

- Excessive silence
- Social withdrawal
- Changes in sleep and eating habits
- Lower work performance

How to Help Yourself

- Take care of your physical being. Attend to basic needs like food, shelter and safety. Get plenty of rest. Eat well-balanced and regular meals, even if they don't seem appealing.
- Acknowledge the loss and your reactions to it. Give yourself permission to feel badly without labeling or judging yourself.
- Take time to grieve. Journal. Attend the funeral or memorial service. Let yourself cry.
- Create everyday routines. Familiar habits can be very comforting.
- Connect. Talk to someone who will listen and allow you to experience your feelings. If you don't feel like talking, just being with a companion can help ease your grief.
- Don't try to "numb the pain" with drugs or alcohol.
- Be kind to yourself. Realize that recurring thoughts and feelings associated with the death are normal. They'll decrease over time and become less painful.
- Look for ways to find meaning. Is there a way you can use what you have learned through the change, crisis or loss to help others? Did you learn something about yourself that will help you in your life? Is there a way you can honor and remember a loved one who passed?

- Ask for support when you need it. Remember, it's a sign of strength to acknowledge when you need additional resources or support. Contact a support group or your Employee Assistance Program (EAP). This confidential service, provided by your employer at no cost to you, helps you manage stress, overcome anxiety or depression, and cope with change, grief and loss. Our EAP specialists are available any time, every day.

How to Help Others

- Extend grace when possible. People experience grief differently. There is no right or wrong way to grieve. Be aware that people who are grieving may say or do things they would not normally. Emotions may change quickly. Don't take these emotional outbursts personally. At work, tasks may take longer to get completed. Productivity may decline for a bit.
- Help meet the basic needs of others. Do they need food, shelter, clothing, transportation, childcare, etc.? How can you help them to meet those needs?
- Connect. Share feelings and check on how others are doing. Allow other people to talk about their feelings. Listen and respect their point of view, even if you don't share it. Respect that different people grieve in different ways. There is no one right way to grieve. If the person does not want to talk, respect that but find other ways to show you care like a note, flowers, or a meal.
- Help others create meaning. Can you organize a memorial? Can you help identify a positive opportunity available because of a change?
- Suggest available help, such as your EAP or a support group. It may take longer for some people than others, but with time and acceptance the pain will lessen.

Critical support when you need it

Visit optumeap.com/criticalsupportcenter for additional critical support resources and information.

This program should not be used for emergency or urgent care needs. In an emergency, call 911 or go to the nearest emergency room. This program is not a substitute for a doctor's or professional's care. Consult with your clinician for specific health care needs, treatment or medication. Due to the potential for a conflict of interest, legal consultation will not be provided on issues that may involve legal action against Optum or its affiliates, or any entity through which the caller is receiving these services directly or indirectly (e.g., employer or health plan). This program and its components may not be available in all states or for all group sizes and is subject to change. Coverage exclusions and limitations may apply.

Optum® is a registered trademark of Optum, Inc. in the U.S. and other jurisdictions. All other brand or product names are trademarks or registered marks or the property of their respective owners. Optum is an equal opportunity employer.

© 2023 Optum, Inc. All rights reserved. WF8463081 223388-092022 OHC