

How to talk about mental health

Stigma surrounding mental health can all too often make talking about mental wellness difficult. You might feel uncomfortable asking for help or checking in on how a friend or colleague is doing, unsure of what language to use or how to broach the topic.

What really matters is that you show that you're there to listen and support the other person. Similarly, if you're asking for help, there's no "correct" way to do it – it's about getting in touch and telling someone you trust that you need support. Below are some healthy ways to talk about your mental well-being and suggestions for how to check in with others regarding their mental health.

Where to turn for support

If you feel like you need support for your mental health, it can often be difficult to get in touch, but you'll likely find that most people want to help and are honoured that you turned to them.

When deciding who to speak with, consider the people in your life who you trust to confide in and who have empathy and emotional intelligence. Is there a family member, a close friend, a teacher, a mentor or someone else who you respect and feel comfortable opening up to?

If you'd prefer to set the stage before the conversation, mention to them that there's something you'd like to discuss and schedule in time to talk. Try to find a private space where you feel comfortable and can speak without being interrupted.

If a face-to-face conversation feels too intimidating, try getting in touch with someone via text. The mode of communication shouldn't be a barrier to asking for help and connecting with someone that you trust.

Suggestions for asking for help

Writing down notes ahead of time about what you want to say may help focus your thoughts.

Don't feel like you need to express everything that you're feeling over the course of one conversation. Talking about what you're going through is often a process that takes place over many discussions and will be a little different with each person that you speak with.

There's no need to be concerned if you don't know how to express yourself or what to say – keep it simple and tell the other person that you're feeling bad and don't know where to turn and would like help. Say things as they are, don't make light of the situation or brush it off like it's not a big deal. Your mental health matters and someone who has your best interests in mind won't think that you're a burden.

Consider what kind of support you want – do you need help with finding a professional to speak with, would you like someone to accompany you to an appointment or are you just looking for a listening ear? Let others know what they can do to help.

In some situations, you may not get the response that you were looking for. Mental health can be a difficult topic for some people to talk about – this may have to do with a lack of information, cultural aspects, someone's background or something else altogether. The important thing is that you don't let this stop you from seeking help elsewhere.

You're in charge

You make the decisions on who you share details about your mental health with and what aspects you want to speak about. If you've found resources that you like, consider sharing them with others to teach them about your condition.

Speaking with trusted friends and family about your mental health is a good place to start. Eventually, you will likely want to speak with a professional as they're trained to help you navigate challenges. It's important to build a strong support network that includes a mix of family and/or friends, as well as professionals.

If you find yourself needing immediate help, don't hesitate to get in touch with someone that you trust, visit an emergency room or contact a crisis hotline.

Show that you're there

You want to make the other person feel validated and understood. During the conversation, repeat back what they've said if you need to clarify anything. Don't try to dominate the situation or instruct them on what to do. Take cues from them about what the next steps are and ask what kind of support they need.

If you can relate to what they're saying, feel free to empathise with them by bringing up your own experiences, but don't make the conversation about yourself. Keep the focus on them and their well-being. Don't dismiss their feelings with comments, such as "It's probably just a phase" or "It's not that big of a deal".

Use your judgement to determine the best plan of action going forward. Sometimes, an individual can be a danger to themselves and needs professional help. If the person seems like they're in immediate danger, seek professional assistance or contact emergency services straight away.

Tips for following up

Let the person that you got in touch with know that you're there to talk in the future as well, and that it wasn't just an isolated discussion. However, don't feel like every conversation that you have with them needs to revolve around their mental health. Strive to be a positive influence in their life – invite them to join you for activities or social get-togethers.

Pay attention to your language and take care not to define a person by their diagnosis, for example, instead of calling someone “bipolar”, say that they are “a person with bipolar disorder”. Never use derogatory terms and labels, such as “mental” or “insane”.

Learning about the mental health challenges that someone is facing can be a supportive way to show that you're there for them. If you come across helpful resources, don't be afraid to pass them along to the person who's dealing with the condition.

Critical support when you need it

Visit optumwellbeing.com/criticalsupportcenter for additional critical support resources and information.

Sources

Child Mind Institute. How to support a friend with mental health challenges. childmind.org/article/support-friend-with-mental-health-challenges.

Child Mind Institute. How to talk about mental health issues. childmind.org/article/talk-mental-health-issues.

Child Mind Institute. How to talk to your parents about getting help. childmind.org/article/how-to-talk-to-your-parents-about-getting-help-if-you-think-you-need-it.

Mental Health America. Time to talk: tips for talking about your mental health. mhanational.org/time-talk-tips-talking-about-your-mental-health.

Mental Health Foundation. How to support someone with a mental health problem. mentalhealth.org.uk/publications/supporting-someone-mental-health-problem.

National Alliance on Mental Illness. Disclosing to others. nami.org/Your-Journey/Individuals-with-Mental-Illness/Disclosing-to-Others.

National Alliance on Mental Illness. How to help a friend. nami.org/Your-Journey/Teens-Young-Adults/How-to-Help-a-Friend.

National Alliance on Mental Illness. Supporting recovery. nami.org/Your-Journey/Family-Members-and-Caregivers/Supporting-Recovery.

Optum. Myths and facts about mental health. livewell.optum.com/sec\_BeWell/sub\_bw\_ConditionsByName\_Anxiety/cnt\_art\_15435\_MythsandFactsAboutMentalHealth.

This programme should not be used for emergency or urgent care needs. In an emergency, call the local emergency services phone number or go to the nearest accident & emergency department. This programme is not a substitute for a doctor's or professional's care. This programme and its components may not be available in all locations, and coverage exclusions and limitations may apply.

© 2024 Optum, Inc. All rights reserved. WF12836817 143882-022024 OHC