

Talking about mental health: 4 tips for parents of teens and young adults

Mental health is an important topic anytime. During the pandemic, which 58% of teens say has affected their mental health,¹ it may be even more so.

For some families talking about mental health may be an everyday occurrence. For other families it may be a new topic and it may feel a little awkward at first. The more you talk about it, the more comfortable it will feel — for you and for them.

If you're wondering how to get started, keep these four tips in mind.

- 1. Remember what being a teen is like. Teenagers are going through a time of change. They may be getting their first job, learning to drive, hanging out with friends more and spending less time with parents. That's all a normal part of development. Social media may also have an impact on teens' lives, making them feel anxious about whether others approve of them, overwhelmed by constant notifications and worried that they're missing out. Frequent Instagram use for young women is also correlated with body dissatisfaction as well as anxiety, depression and low self-esteem.²
- 2. Watch for cues. Teens may bring up mental health topics on their own. They might mention what a friend is going through or how they're feeling themselves. It's important to listen, so you don't miss these opportunities.
- 3. Respect differences. There's a good chance you and the teen or young adult in your life will have different opinions about political, social or other topics. While it may be tough, try to stay calm and respect their different views. This can help you build trust and make them more open to talking with you. Instead of lecturing, help your teen plan how to make healthy choices about alcohol and drugs, relationships and other topics they'll face.
- 4. Learn about mental health. While many people have personal experience with depression, anxiety or other mental health concerns, for some people these topics are new. If you aren't familiar with these conditions, educate yourself before you bring them up. Also know what signs to watch for. If someone is feeling sad or withdrawn for more than a couple of weeks, having severe mood swings, worrying a lot or getting into fights with others, they may be dealing with a mental health issue and need help.³

Eating disorders

When people are dealing with overwhelming feelings, they sometimes develop eating disorders. Eating disorders often begin in the teens and early 20s.⁴

Alcohol use

Different cultures have different norms about alcohol. While some countries permit use during the teenage years, others don't allow it until later — or ban it completely.

Wondering how to start talking about mental health? Check out these conversation starters you and your family can use together. Download at optumeap.com.

If you or someone you know has thoughts about suicide, seek help right away. If you or someone you know is in immediate danger, call emergency services.

1. Global Shapers Community, et al. COVID-19 youth survey: Report. cdn.who.int/media/docs/default-source/epi-win/covid-19-survey_report_for_who---final.pdf?sfvrsn=f23bd740_4. November 9, 2020. Accessed September 27, 2021.
2. Sherlock M, Wagstaff DL. Exploring the relationship between frequency of Instagram use, exposure to idealized images and psychological well-being in women. Psychol Pop Media Cult. 2019;8(4):482–490. psycnet.apa.org/record/2018-15210-001.
3. World Health Organization. Depression. who.int/news-room/fact-sheets/detail/depression. September 13, 2021. Accessed December 13, 2021.
4. World Health Organization. Adolescent mental health. who.int/news-room/fact-sheets/detail/adolescent-mental-health. November 17, 2021. Accessed December 13, 2021.

This programme should not be used for emergency or urgent care needs. In an emergency, call 999 if you are in the United Kingdom or the local emergency services phone number if you are outside the United Kingdom or go to the nearest accident and emergency department. This programme is not a substitute for a doctor's or professional's care. Due to the potential for a conflict of interest, legal consultation will not be provided on issues that may involve legal action against Optum or its affiliates or any entity through which the caller is receiving these services directly or indirectly (e.g. employer or health plan). This programme and all its components, in particular services to family members below the age of 16, may not be available in all locations and are subject to change without prior notice. Experience and/or educational levels of Employee Assistance Programme resources may vary based on contract requirements or country regulatory requirements. Coverage exclusions and limitations may apply.

Optum® is a registered trademark of Optum, Inc. in the U.S. and other jurisdictions. All other brand or product names are trademarks or registered marks or the property of their respective owners. Optum is an equal opportunity employer.

© 2022 Optum, Inc. All rights reserved. WF5997810 138255-012022