

THE MOVING FORWARD TOGETHER PODCAST:

Managing Relationship Challenges During COVID-19

DR. DYLAN ROSS

DR. JOHN GOTTMAN
& DR. JULIE GOTTMAN

On the fourth episode of the Optum Moving Forward Together podcast, Dr. Dylan Ross spoke to Dr. Julie Gottman and Dr. John Gottman, researchers, clinical psychologists and co-founders of the Gottman Institute. They discuss the challenges relationships may be facing during COVID-19.

As people spend more time at home — often in close quarters with family — they can become increasingly depressed and irritable. At the same time, they can feel lonely because they miss seeing friends and, if they're working from home or they've been laid off, their co-workers.

Based on four decades of working with couples and families, Dr. Julie and Dr. John offer several suggestions for getting through this unique time with our relationships intact.

- Be aware and patient. Right now, many of us are seeing our family members more than usual — 24 hours a day, in some cases. Not being able to have time for ourselves can be stressful. And small disagreements can escalate quickly. Try to understand how COVID-19 is affecting those around you, and be patient when they get irritable. Keep in mind additional stressors, such as financial worries, that also may be affecting your loved one's mood.

- Appreciate the good. One issue Dr. Julie and Dr. John often see when couples are having trouble is a shift toward criticism and focusing on the negative. Instead, it's important to look for what your partner is doing right. Create a culture of appreciation and respect by pointing out what's positive and saying thank you. And don't forget little physical moments too, such as holding hands or cuddling. During this stressful time, those actions may be more important than ever.
- Set aside time for serious conversations. While it can be tough to have important, private conversations if you have kids in the home constantly these days, it's still essential. Set aside a time to talk about the issues on your mind. Be sure to start in a way that makes your partner feel open, not attacked. "I feel" sentences are one good way to introduce a tough topic. Ask your partner to listen and confirm what you said. Then, do the same in reverse. When you truly understand each other, it's easier to come to a compromise.
- Seek support. While online medical visits and therapy sessions have been available for years, COVID-19 has quickly ramped up their popularity. If you could use support during this time — individually or as a couple — be sure to use one of the many available resources to connect with a therapist.

This program should not be used for emergency or urgent care needs. In an emergency, call 911 if you are in the United States or the local emergency services phone number if you are outside the United States, or go to the nearest accident and emergency department. This program is not a substitute for a doctor's or professional's care. Due to the potential for a conflict of interest, legal consultation will not be provided on issues that may involve legal action against Optum or its affiliates, or any entity through which the caller is receiving these services directly or indirectly (e.g., employer or health plan). This program and all its components, in particular services to family members below the age of 16, may not be available in all locations and are subject to change without prior notice. Experience and/or educational levels of Employee Assistance Program resources may vary based on contract requirements or country regulatory requirements. Coverage exclusions and limitations may apply.

Optum® is a registered trademark of Optum, Inc. in the U.S. and other jurisdictions. All other brand or product names are trademarks or registered marks or the property of their respective owners. Optum is an equal opportunity employer.

© 2020 Optum, Inc. All rights reserved. WF998385 203791-072020